Wife says Briton wasn't Soviet spy

LONDON—The former wife of Jack Wolfenden, a telecommunications expert at Britain's electronic espionage center until his death in a glider crash last summer, has denied a CBS News report hinting that her former husband was a Soviet spy. Three London newspapers also published reports Friday that appeared to support Pamela Wolfenden's assertion. CBS reported in the United States that security men were showing special interest in the 56-year-old Wolfenden's death July 25. It reported allegations that Wolfenden might have been involved in alleged leaks of secrets from the Cheltenham center to the Soviets.
